THE Press of this morning gives the par-enable him to understand the mechanical difficulty which prevented their print ing the manuscript in the manner required, and that he would be induced to withdraw the offensive alternative contained in the words "malicious slanderers." His Lordship has taken no notice of the message, and hence, we suppose, the appearance of the article in our contemporary this morning. The use of the words is not, we understand, denied by His Lordship, but he avers that he uttered them in a jocular tone.

Such "jocularity" is very apt to be const dered offensive to a sense of self-respect, and in this case the epithet "malicious slanderer" had an effect not content plated by His Lordship. One of the persons affected by his words appears in the Supreme Court at intervals, charged (among other things) with being a "malicious and evil-disposed person." In the Suprems Court that person can repel the imputation openly, but in such a case as this his opportunity of self defence is neces sarily limited to private protest, and this has, as yet, been ineffectual to piccure the withdrawal of the words complained of. The report will, we hear, be printed for circulation at His Lordship's private expense, in which event the whole circumstances of the case may again come before the public. It was nearly for it is. It is good policy, often, to avoid

His Lordship coupled his r. quest with an intimation that, if it was not complied with, he should regard the conductors of both papers as "malicious slanderers." The manuscript was a full report of the proceedings before the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council in re the locally celebrated "Contempt" case, upon which the editors of both papers freely, but not improperly, commented at the time of its occurrence. It was impossible, for various reasons, to observe his Lordship's behests, and the manuscript, after having been submitted in the proper quarters, was returned to his Lordship, who was referred to the conductors of the papers, in the hope that personal communication with them would

It has now been ascertained beyond doubt that the Literary class were the Chief promoters of the recent outrage at, Yangchow. The natives said that they were encouraged to get up a riot against the Missionaries in consequence of the Rev. The circumstance became in a short time the subject of common conversation in the Tea-houses it next spread to Yang-chow and became the gossip there, and the result was, that the Literary brotherhood, who are par excellence the most conceited and obstructive class in China, decided on expelling the detested foreigners from their city. They were emboldened by the success already gained in Chinkiang, and they naturally concluded that if a Ch's Hsien had gained the upper hand of both the Consul and the Missionaries, they had nothing to fear.

GENERAL LI AND THE CHINESE GOVERNMENT. (N. C. Herald.)

Though viewing Li with anger, suspicion and dislike, the Court seems obliged to tolerate him. He has been degraded three steps in nominal rank; so that he now bears the rank of Fantai instead of Tsoongbut he can afford to laugh at a sentence which leaves his actual power intact. A sentence which leaves him in command of his army and in possession of his viceroyalty can neither do him much harm, nor his political opponents great good. Driven o flud an excuse for its own weakness, the Government talks of Li's meritorious services in Kiangsu as saving him from the consequence of his failures in Shantung but it is much more likely that his salvation is due to his strength and to the Government's weakness. So long as he and his old ally Tsen-kwo-fan pull together, he is in little danger. Simultaneously with the news of his retention of power comes an announcement that Lin-mingchuen has come forth from his retirement at the Emperor's express request, and has resumed his command in Li's camp. It is lifficult to resist the inference that, when Li's position seemed risky, this General withdrew in his interest; and has returned now that the storm has blown over. Matters thus stand pretty nearly where they did before the late imperial outburst. Both Li and Tsoh have lost three steps in nominal rank and a Tartar General has been appointed their nominal superior; but they really retain their power and command. It is not surprising to learn, farther, that Government trust to the Tartar cavalry to overlook the acts of Li and Tso as much as to operate against the rebols. They evidently view these mandarins with great distrust; and there is no doubt that if the two chose to strike, Government could oppose no adequate orce to resist them. It is remarkable that Tso now seems to share with Li the honor of suspicion; whereas he was once considered the latter's political rival. Another striking piece of news is the fact that the rebels have re-entered Shantung. and that the inhabitants have begged to be left alone to deal with them. Our correscondent says "the people have requested the mandarins and their soldiers to leave the maranders to be dealt with by themselves. They say they can protect themselves or can, at all events, support one plundering body better than two; so have requested the Imperialists to give them It is said that they actually did gain one victory over them; but that the Impeialists under Tsoh then came up; and not only took it from them, but pitched into them for interfering. The soldiers are said to have feigned not to be able to distinguish the people from the rebels." This news seems to have created a sensation even at Peking, and, -whether in consequence of it or not, -after its arrival, Tsoh and Li were degraded in rank as we have said. But what a commentary this is on the socalled government of the country. ple actually petitioning to be delivered from its own protectors: begging to be left to its face rather than be doubly oppressed. Those who believe implicitly in the people's Feng shuey, and in the mandarins as the exponents of popular feeling on the question now pending, may receive some new light from this abullition. Ever since the outbreak of the Yellow River and the close of the Taeping rebellion-two events which contributed largely to swell the ranks of the Northern Nienfei to their present proportions—the inhabitants of Shantung have been subject to periodical incursions and plunder. By handitti first and soldiers afterwards, they have been plundered and maltreated; and now in despair they beg the Government to at least let them alone if it cannot secure them peace; to at least not add the oppression of its own servants to the outrages of those who contemn its NATURE AND ART. -Our country lanes and hedgerows afford abundance of material to supply us with an endless variety of form and culture especially applicable for the decoration of our walls, and for the enrichment of articles of ornament and use. 7 The Corinthian capital is said to have had its origin from the circumstance of a tile having been placed on the top of a basket. around which grew the leaves of the acanthus plant: This, whether true or not. is highly suggestive, and tells us there are beautiful combinations to be found in nature, which the designer would do well to cultivate. - From Popular Educator.

Some of the Italian journals state that Father Secoi, the constructor of the great astronomical clock so much remarked at the Universal Exhibition of 1867, has discovered a motive power, lighter, stronger, and more economical than steam.
